1.7. The Buyer's rights due to defective performance

1.7.1. The Buyer's rights (if it is not apparent from the circumstances of the entering into contract that the purchase affects also his/her business activity)

1. Subject to section 2165 of the Civil Code, if the thing has defects, the Buyer has the right to demand delivery of a new thing free of defects if it is not unreasonable with respect to the nature of the defect, but if the defect concerns only a part of the thing, the Buyer may only demand exchange of the part; if it is not possible, he/she may withdraw from contract. However, if it is not proportionate to the nature of the defect, in particular if the defect can be removed without unnecessary delay, the Buyer has the right to removal of the defect free of charge.
2. The Buyer has the right to delivery of a new thing or exchange of a part also in case of a removable defect if the Buyer cannot use the thing properly because of repeated occurrence of the defect after its repair or because of a larger number of defects. In such case, the Buyer also has the right to withdraw from contract.

3. If the Buyer does not withdraw from contract or exercise his/her right to delivery of a new thing free of defects, to exchange of its part, or to repair of the thing, he/she can demand a reasonable discount. The Buyer has the right to a reasonable discount also if the Seller cannot deliver to him/her a new thing free of defects, exchange its part, or repair the thing, as well as if the Seller fails to remedy the situation within a reasonable period of time or if the remedying of the situation causes considerable difficulty to the consumer.
4. The Buyer does not have the right due to defective performance if, before the acceptance of the goods, the Buyer was aware that the thing had a defect or if the Buyer him- or herself caused the defect.
5. If the thing has a defect which creates the Seller's obligation and if the thing was sold at a reduced price or as an already used thing, the Buyer has the right to a reasonable discount instead of the right to exchange of the thing.
6. The Buyer is entitled to exercise the right due to a defect which occurs in consumer goods, within a time period of four months from the acceptance. This provision does not apply:
 - a) to the thing sold at a reduced price due to a defect for which the reduced price was agreed,
 - b) to the wear of the thing which is due to its normal use,
 - c) to the defect of an already used thing which corresponds to the extent of use or wear of the thing at the time of its acceptance by the Buyer, or
 - d) if it arises from the nature of the thing.

1.7.2. The Buyer's rights if the defective performance constitutes a material breach of contract

1. Subject to section 2106 of the Civil Code, if the defective performance constitutes a material breach of contract, the Buyer always has the right:
 - a) to removal of the defect by means of delivery of a new thing free of defects or by means of delivery of a missing thing,
 - b) to removal of the defect by means of repair of the thing,
 - c) to a reasonable discount from the selling price, or
 - d) to withdraw from contract.
2. The Buyer has to inform the Seller about the selected option by means of the notice of defect or without unnecessary delay after the notice of defect. The selected option cannot be changed by the Buyer without the Seller's consent; this does not apply if the Buyer has requested repair of a defect which proves to be beyond repair.

If the Seller fails to remove the defects within a reasonable period of time or if it informs the Buyer that it will not remove the defects, the Buyer may request a reasonable discount from the selling price instead of removal of the defect, or he/she may withdraw from contract.
3. If the Buyer does not select an option in due time, he/she has the same rights as in case of defective performance which constitutes an immaterial breach of contract.

1.7.3. The Buyer's rights if the defective performance constitutes an immaterial breach of contract

1. Subject to section 2107 of the Civil Code, if the defective performance constitutes an immaterial breach of contract and at the same time the provisions of subclause 1.7.1 are not applied, the Buyer has the right to removal of the defect or to a reasonable discount from the selling price.

2. Until the Buyer exercises the right to discount from the selling price or withdraws from contract, the Seller may deliver what is missing or remove a legal defect. The Seller may, at its option, remove other defects by means of repair of the thing or delivery of a new thing; the option must not cause unreasonable costs to be incurred by the Buyer.
3. If the Seller fails to remove the defect of the thing in a timely manner or if it refuses to remove the defect of the thing, the Buyer may request discount from the selling price or may withdraw from contract. The Buyer may not change the selected option without the Seller's consent.

1.7.4.

1. The Buyer may not withdraw from contract or request delivery of a new thing if he/she is unable to return the thing in the condition in which he/she received it. This does not apply
 - a) if the condition has changed due to an examination made to determine the defect of the thing,
 - b) if the Buyer had already used the thing before the defect was found,
 - c) if the impossibility to return the thing in an unchanged condition was caused by the Buyer's action or omission to act, or
 - d) if the Buyer had already sold the thing before the defect was found, used it up or changed it during normal use; if this happened only partially, the Buyer has to return to the Seller what he/she is still able to return and has to compensate the Seller to the extent to which he/she benefited from the use of the thing.

1. The Buyer is obliged to give notice of the defect without unnecessary delay after the defect can be found if he/she uses an early examination and sufficient care, otherwise he/she will lose his/her rights due to defective performance. The same applies to a latent defect if the Buyer fails to give notice of the defect without unnecessary delay after the defect can be found if the Buyer uses sufficient care, however at the latest two years after the handover of the thing. If the Buyer fails to give timely notice of the defect, he/she will lose the right to withdraw from contract.
